Q9

Case study. With a multipronged strategy of the Central and State Governments, the naxalite problem has been resolved to a large extent. However, there are a few pockets where it still persists. Rohit is posted as SP (Special Operations). He established an excellent intelligence network. Leading a contingent, he got a message that about ten hard core naxalites were hiding in a particular village. His team overpowered all the naxalites along with their automatic weapons. Meanwhile more than five hundred tribal women surrounded the village demanding immediate release of the insurgents. Two of those apprehended were hard core top insurgents with prize money of ten lakhs on their heads. If he did not release them, the situation could get out of control. (a) What are the options available with Rohit to cope with the situation? (b) What are the ethical dilemmas being faced by Rohit? (c) Which of the options, do you think, would be more appropriate for Rohit to adopt and why? (d) In the present situation, what are the extra precautionary measures to be taken by the police in dealing with women protesters?

SP Special Operations

A police command tasked with armed left-wing extremism; the SP still remains bound by criminal procedure and human rights.

Prize money

A State bounty on named cadres; it is a tool of identification, not a licence to kill or to refuse de-escalation.

Human shield problem

A crowd, especially of women, may be mobilised to block extraction; ethics still forbids treating the crowd as combatants by default.

Distinction

The duty to separate those who fight from those who stand; a republic that skips this repeats the insurgent's contempt for civilians.

Women in the first line

A standard crowd-care practice: women police for women protesters, to reduce sexual violence and humiliation.

District Magistrate's civil face

The DM can promise fair trial and no village punishment; the SP should not try to be both the arresting officer and the only politician.
